- How do different communication levels impact your personal and academic life?
- Have you faced and resolved communication issues due to cultural differences?
- How does effective group communication contribute to collaborative project success?

Communication is both important to our personal and academic life. In personal we use communication to express ourselves to the ones we love and important to us, while in academics, we use communication for us to converse, exchange ideas from our classmates and the teacher. We use the different communication levels for different scenarios while conversing, to use the different levels, we must have the proper setting for it to be effective. I have faced and resolved communication issues, it's known as the language barrier. At school I have this friend who is Nigerian. At first we didn't talk that much because I thought there was a language barrier. He had a thick accent, and he couldn't understand Filipino. I resolved it, I was helping him to the point that I familiarized the way he talks. Group communication is handy when it comes to collaborative projects. Multiple persons have to brainstorm some ideas on how to accomplish the given task.
